Taking advantage of the uncertainty brought by the pandemic and of consumers’ lack of information, confinement and vulnerability

Challenges: especially important regarding Vulnerable and disadvantaged consumers (elderly; families with low income; immigrants; children; uneducated individuals).

Also related to the Digital divide, due to the relevance of digital communication throughout quarantine.
UNCTAD’s Call for Action

UNCTAD recommended five key initiatives to protect consumers during the COVID-19 crisis:

1. Launch coordinated awareness raising campaigns on scams and misleading and unfair business practices related to COVID-19, especially those directly affecting consumers, paying special attention to rural populations and other vulnerable groups.

2. Monitor markets for essential consumer goods, undertake enforcement action against misleading and false claims, hoarding and price gouging and evaluate the viability of imposing price caps on essential consumer goods, including those that help curb infection such as masks and hand sanitizers.

UNCTAD’S CALL FOR ACTION (II)

3. Take full advantage of digital tools for information campaigns, consumer complaints and redress, and urge major online platforms to cooperate with respective authorities.

4. Address the needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged consumers, particularly to ensure their access to essential goods and services, such as water, energy and financial services, and consider the extension deadlines for payment of utilities’ bills, credit cards, rents and mortgages, in cooperation with financial institutions.

5. Cooperate with other consumer protection agencies by exchanging information on COVID-19 related national policies and measures in the field of consumer protection.
FINAL REMARKS

• The pandemic highlighted the utmost importance of an active Consumer Protection policy across the globe.

• Currently the priority of Governments is to boost economic recovery, encouraging businesses reopening and supporting employment: substantial packages of public funds are being made available through subsidies, special loans, State guarantees.

• Economic recovery must ensure the full respect for Consumer rights and provide for the necessary protection and consideration of Consumer interests in all areas, in particular, of Vulnerable and disadvantaged consumers.

• Consumer Protection agencies must engage and contribute to all policy discussions and to all regulatory frameworks.
