II. TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION

A. PROGRESS IN SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT SINCE THE TENTH SESSION OF THE COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT (Agenda item 4)

1. Implementation of activities under the ESCWA programme of work and pursuant to recommendations made by the Committee (Agenda item 4 (a))

4. Under this sub-item, the Committee considered document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/3 (Part I) on implementing the activities under the ESCWA programme of work and the recommendations made by the Committee. The document set out the expected accomplishments of subprogramme 2 on social development, and progress in implementing activities under the ESCWA programme of work for the biennium 2016-2017. It indicated activities that were implemented in 2015 but not mentioned in the report on implementing social development-related activities presented to the Committee at its tenth session. Those activities focused on building capacity; providing advisory services; preparing studies; implementing field projects; organizing meetings on various social development issues and priorities, such as social justice, migration, social protection, social inclusion, young people and persons with disabilities; integrating the main demographic social groups in national development policies; applying a participatory approach in policymaking; and incorporating the 2030 Agenda in national development strategies.

5. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Acknowledging progress in implementing social development activities, requesting the secretariat to continue providing technical cooperation programmes to member States, strengthening regional consultations, and exchanging best practices and lessons learned on issues covered by the ESCWA programme of work that meet the needs of member States;

(b) Paying greater attention to disability issues, especially in conflict-affected countries that witness significant increases in the numbers of persons with disabilities, providing technical assistance to member States to develop standardized national disability registers, offering health insurance to persons with disabilities and enacting related regulatory laws, preparing detailed analytical studies to monitor the needs of persons with disabilities, achieving greater balance in the provision of ESCWA services and activities, and involving all countries in disability-related workshops;

(c) Highlighting projects and activities implemented by ESCWA in several member States to increase benefits therefrom, especially activities tackling shared issues and issues discussed in preparation for global agreements or conferences, such as migration within the context of preparations for the global compact for migration; implementing the SDGs and incorporating them in national development plans; and preparing for the 2019 global review of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development;

(d) Focusing future activities on rebuilding and rehabilitation in response to current events in some member States;

(e) Requesting ESCWA to provide technical support to combat poverty, prepare comprehensive data surveys to achieve social justice, especially since some member States have launched projects to review social protection for vulnerable groups, and researching the effectiveness and efficiency of social security systems.

6. The representative of the secretariat clarified that member States must submit requests for technical assistance through ESCWA official channels by sending them to the Programme Planning and Technical Cooperation Section with detailed information on the required activities and expected outputs.

2. Report of the Intersessional Group of Experts on Disability on its first meeting
(Agenda item 4 (b))

7. Under this sub-item, the Committee considered document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/3 (Part II) on the report of the Intersessional Group of Experts on Disability. The Group was formed pursuant to a recommendation by the Committee at its tenth session. The document set out key issues discussed at the Group's first meeting (Beirut, 20-21 September 2016) that focused on article 33 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities on national implementation and monitoring, on the disability-related SDGs, and on difficulties in collecting detailed data on disability. The document also presented the recommendations of the Group, and its comments on its proposed rules of procedure and terms of reference, and the issues to be addressed by focal points members of the Group, such as the frequency of meetings and additional funding.

8. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Continuing work on standardizing the definition of disability and classifying its types, noting that relevant ministries had not agreed on one definition, with some adopting the definition of the Washington Group on Disability Statistics and others using the medical definition;

(b) Forming the Group of Experts on Disability with two representatives from each country, one representing the Government and the other representing civil society. Two reports can be submitted on the mechanism to implement the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities in each country, one from the relevant government body and the other from civil society;

(c) Collaborating with the Arab Labour Organization to guarantee employment for persons with disabilities and provide them with social protection;

(d) Requesting ESCWA to provide technical assistance to the Sudan on disability issues, especially regarding data collection;

(e) Benefiting from country experiences in enhancing the rights of persons with disabilities and integrating them into the labour market, exchanging expertise and best practices, and benefiting from ESCWA reports in that regard, especially the most recent report on Strengthening Social Protection for Persons with Disabilities in Arab Countries;¹

(f) Funding the meetings of the Group of Experts on Disability, especially through private-sector involvement, and aiming to hold meetings biennially with the possibility of member States hosting another meeting within that two-year period.

3. Results of the questionnaire on the programmes and activities of the Social Development Division
(Agenda item 4 (c))

9. The representative of the secretariat gave a presentation on the results of the ESCWA questionnaire to consider member States' views on the activities and outcomes of the Social Development Division, and key proposals on the best ways to improve activity implementation. The questionnaire was one mechanism adopted by ESCWA to determine country priorities. ESCWA had sent the questionnaire to national focal points, who referred it to relevant ministries. Despite close follow-up, ESCWA had received responses from only six countries, namely Egypt, Iraq, Oman, Palestine, Saudi Arabia and Tunisia. ESCWA was prepared to consider other mechanisms proposed by countries to increase the response rate.

10. Country responses included proposals to focus the Division's work programme on social protection issues; persons with disabilities, especially developing a unified classification of disability types; migration and development; social justice; combating poverty; social inclusion; policies to strengthen social cohesion; and family empowerment for those receiving cash benefits. Respondents also made suggestions to ensure that technical assistance services better met country priorities by expanding technical support fields to include social protection, older persons, young people, persons with disabilities, and social security. They proposed establishing an electronic forum to exchange expertise and enhance communication and interaction between countries, improving capacity-building activities and training workshops organized by ESCWA, and issuing periodic publications with summaries of future training sessions and disseminating them to member States. With regard to improving communication mechanisms with countries and publishing ESCWA products, proposals included establishing a database for experts in the social development field in the Arab region and regularly communicating with them, conducting joint studies with member States on national priority issues, and enhancing technology use. Questionnaire results also included proposals to develop frameworks to implement the 2030 Agenda. Detailed questionnaire results are available on the ESCWA website.²

11. In the ensuing discussion, participants stressed the importance of the questionnaire as a tool for evaluating the work of the Social Development Division and for planning future work. They enquired as to whether the responses of the six countries would be used as a basis for determining country priorities, or whether efforts would be made to collect responses from the remaining countries. Participants made the following proposals:

(a) Achieving greater balance and coordination between the Division's activities and commitments on key issues related to global agreements or work programmes and the activities of the 2030 Agenda;

(b) Strengthening coordination between ESCWA, United Nations country offices and other development partners at the regional and national levels to determine priorities;

(c) Analysing the reasons behind the questionnaire's low response rate and identifying weaknesses in the questionnaire, in the means of communication and coordination, or in the approach used to receive responses;

(d) Sending the questionnaire to non-government bodies to gauge the opinion of all segments of society;

(e) Sending a working group to all countries to collect the required information from government bodies and other groups tasked with identifying priorities, rather than only sending the questionnaire by email;

(f) Involving countries in developing the questionnaire.

4. National follow-up on the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice in the Arab Region
(Agenda item 4(d))

12. At the eleventh session on the Committee on Social Development, a roundtable discussion was held on national follow-up of the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice. Representatives of Iraq, Morocco, the Sudan and Tunisia participated in the discussion.

13. The representative of the secretariat gave an overview of progress made in preparing a guide on mainstreaming social justice in development plans, policies and programmes, and steps taken to adopt the guide as a capacity-building tool. He said that ESCWA had prepared the guide pursuant to the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice issued at the twenty-eighth ESCWA session (Tunis, 15-18 September 2014) and to a recommendation by the Committee on Social Justice at its tenth session (Rabat, 8-9 September 2015). The guide had been presented and piloted in several workshops and meetings, and work was currently underway to review and revise the final draft. The guide would be used as a training tool in workshops at the regional and national levels to strengthen countries' capacity to mainstream social justice concepts in formulating, developing and evaluating plans and public policies, in line with country needs and specificities. He also noted the guide's goals and target groups, explained the methodology used to prepare it, and the contents of its six parts.

14. Many participants shared their experiences in formulating policies that took into account social justice, and explained how they would benefit from the guide and the importance of promoting participation and social justice to improve policy effectiveness.

15. Mr. Mohamed Fajri, the representative of Morocco, gave a presentation in which he highlighted the commitment of Morocco to the concept of social justice and to mainstreaming it in public policy. Achieving social development was a prominent aspect of the Government's approach over the past 20 years; recently, achieving social justice had become a pressing need. He said that the commitment of Morocco to that approach was enshrined in the country's various constitutions, especially the new 2011 constitution where several provisions required the establishment of a socially just society. Royal and government statements at many key events had also stressed the importance of achieving social justice. He added that the ministry responsible for social development was focused on advancing marginalized groups and improving their living conditions. He highlighted the ministry's main achievements, including Ikram 2012-2016 (a government plan for equality), a law on combating violence against women, and a body to fight discrimination. He said that the Government paid special attention to disability issues, and was on the verge of completing a public policy on advancing the rights of persons with disabilities, consistent with a human rights-based approach and a social justice approach. A national policy was also underway to protect children's rights and organize awareness-raising campaigns to protect older persons through several programmes and activities aimed at mainstreaming the concept of social justice.

16. Mr. Taoufiq Kalthoum, the representative of Tunisia, gave a presentation on key reforms adopted in Tunisia to support the achievement of social justice. Since the 1960s, Tunisia had focused on advancing human capital, improving the livelihoods of marginalized groups, and combating marginalization through free education, family planning and other measures to achieve social justice. He said that the concept of social justice had been mainstreamed in the new constitution's preamble and in several articles on health, education, women's rights and the rights of persons with disabilities. The five-year plan on economic and social development 2016-2020 contained several structural and policy reforms and development programmes that upheld the concept of social justice, including establishing a national social protection floor, and dedicated a pillar to human development and social inclusion as bases of social justice. He considered several reforms carried out by the Ministry of Social Affairs in that regard, such as promoting mechanisms and programmes for vulnerable groups by adopting new approaches for social assistance and economic inclusion, and developing a new system for economic, education and social inclusion for persons with disabilities, increasing employment and raising incomes as a social justice mechanism, and improving citizens' access to social services to achieve equality.

17. Mr. Hussein Ali Abdul Hussein Al Saedi, the representative of Iraq, gave a presentation in which he clarified the commitment of Iraq to the concept of social justice. He said that several articles of the Iraqi constitution indicated that the Government must provide social security, health insurance and basic living requirements to individuals and households, especially women, children and persons with disabilities. The Ministry of Labour and Social Development was working to achieve sustainable development and incorporate it in its strategic plans, and was allocating funds for their implementation in partnership with all social actors. The Ministry was implementing the concept of social justice through programmes and projects on eradicating all types of poverty, raising living standards for Iraqi households, enacting a social protection law covering all social groups (Iraqi and non-Iraqi), regulating the establishment of small enterprises, granting small loans to the unemployed, and offering conditional cash benefits. The commitment of Iraq to the concept of social justice was further evidenced by the enactment of a new social security law, and the development and implementation of national strategies to end violence against women and reduce poverty, and other strategies for children and young people based on the principles of justice and fairness.

18. Mr. Jamal al Nile, the representative of the Sudan, gave a presentation on formulating policies that took into account social justice, noting that the 2005 Sudanese constitution cemented a broad understanding of social justice by incorporating an annex on basic public rights. He said that the public sector's strategy contained fundamental issues, such as eradicating poverty, ensuring stability and resettlement, and implementing various reforms to end conflict, including establishing development funds in conflict areas. Several policies and programmes had been adopted, such as the national population policy and a plan to support poor households, providing cash benefits, and integrating persons with disabilities into the labour market and supporting them with small projects. He said that work was underway to develop an integrated social policy, in collaboration with ESCWA, committed to the concept of social justice and to citizens' values and public rights. The Sudanese commitment to mainstreaming the concept of social justice was also reflected in the development of national programmes to implement the SDGs. The Ministry of Security and Social Development was using the guide on mainstreaming social justice in development plans to prepare several documents, and was coordinating with partners in other ministries to disseminate and benefit from the guide. He highlighted the challenges facing implementation, notably funding, and some proposals on ways to benefit from the guide, such as involving civil society organizations in discussions on achieving social justice, and reviewing basic documents in all countries to ensure that they covered social justice issues. Such a process would require organizing workshops and seminars to strengthen the use of the guide and build relevant capacity.

19. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Stressing the importance of coordination between ministries and organizations working on achieving social development to avoid the duplication of efforts;

(b) Affirming the need to prepare national reports on social development that monitor progress in policy implementation;

(c) Highlighting the importance of policies based on human rights rather than on current needs, whatever the circumstances and security situation;

(d) Confirming that the concept of social justice is a general concept that must cover all individuals and classes, which must be taken into account in all policies, especially economic policies, to avoid the growth of one sector over another or at the expense of another;

(e) Researching the possibility of ESCWA developing a general framework to tackle poverty as a reference for countries, and a general framework for implementing the 2030 Agenda in Arab countries to expedite SDG implementation.

*5. Technical assistance for the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals
(Agenda item 4 (e))*

20. The representative of the secretariat gave a presentation on the ESCWA approach to supporting national efforts on SDG implementation and the areas of technical assistance offered by ESCWA in that regard. He said that the SDGs were one component of the 2030 Agenda, in addition to the declaration and the means of implementation, review and follow-up. He added that the development concept was based on five dimensions: economic, social, environmental, political (governance and participation) and a cultural dimension that was often overlooked, creating a gap in development policies. The last two dimensions were present in national policies but were partially missing from the 2030 Agenda, and entirely absent from the prevailing concept of development. He stressed that the social component would remain the weakest if not bolstered by policies on social issues, given that those were an integral part of national public policy.

21. He summarized the outcomes of the Arab Forum for Sustainable Development, notably the need to avoid developing partial sectoral policies, study multidimensional poverty, and focus on disability issues. He gave some examples of the types of technical assistance provided for implementing the 2030 Agenda at the national level in Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, the State of Palestine and the Sudan, where attention was focused on adapting the 2030 Agenda to national specificities, while stressing the importance of striking a balance between technical aspects and policymaking and the need for transformative policies to achieve development while leaving no one behind. He mentioned the ESCWA comprehensive approach to developing the strategic framework for its programme of work.

22. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Adapting the 2030 Agenda at the national level to meet national priorities and specificities and country implementation capacity, especially since some global goals are related to specific geographic areas and not always applicable to other regions or countries;

(b) Strengthening partnerships between government bodies, international organizations, civil society institutions and the private sector to prepare national plans and implement the 2030 Agenda;

(c) Reviewing data sources and not relying solely on data from national statistical offices, but rather using civil registers, research and studies to extract data, and providing comparable data;

(d) Dividing work between all government bodies and ensuring collaboration between them;

(e) Ensuring policy consistency and integration between the economic and social dimensions, and not overlooking one dimension at the expense of another in national policies and strategies;

(f) Stressing the importance of incorporating the SDGs in national plans to ensure a more effective contribution by Arab countries in implementing the 2030 Agenda so as to secure significant achievements. This requires a real commitment from countries, and the identification of institutional frameworks, funding sources and monitoring and follow-up tools;

(g) Highlighting efforts by Iraq to eradicate poverty, especially by developing national policies and launching a social protection network project covering 1.5 million households (a pioneering project that member States can benefit from);

(h) Highlighting efforts by the Syrian Arab Republic to establish an aid fund to provide social protection services at all levels, including to poor households and persons with disabilities;

(i) Recognizing efforts by Tunisia to tackle the causes of poverty by developing national strategies to combat poverty that bring together efforts by all ministries, and encouraging self-reliance among beneficiaries by funding small projects;

(j) Stressing that ESCWA technical services should not be limited to developing policies but should also cover programme implementation.

B. PRIORITY ISSUES IN ACHIEVING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT IN THE ARAB REGION (Agenda item 5)

1. ESCWA, Habitat III and the New Urban Agenda from a socially inclusive perspective (Agenda item 5 (a))

23. Under this sub-item, the Committee considered document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/4(Part I) on ESCWA, Habitat III and the New Urban Agenda from a socially inclusive perspective. The representative of the secretariat gave an overview of the goals and outcomes of Habitat III, held in Quito from 17 to 20 October 2016. ESCWA had participated in the conference preparations at the regional level, and had led the regional consultative process in collaboration with its partners (UN Habitat and the League of Arab States). The document set out statistical data on urbanization rates in the Arab region and globally, and the demographic and development challenges in the region.

24. The representative of the secretariat gave a detailed explanation of the New Urban Agenda adopted at Habitat III, and its impact on the Arab region. The New Urban Agenda represented a qualitative shift in city management and planning by promoting an urban development model incorporating all aspects of sustainable development, opting to avoid rather than cope with the negative effects of urbanization, and highlights the benefits of developing policies through an interconnected approach, so as to ensure more inclusive, resilient, secure and sustainable cities. The presentation covered the role of ESCWA in implementing the New Urban Agenda from an inclusive social perspective, and potential ESCWA support to member States. ESCWA had made commitments to implement the Urban Agenda at the regional level, including a project funded by the United Nations Development Account on national urban policies.

25. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) All data in document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/4(Part I) were disseminated by the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs, which publishes periodic estimates on population and urban indicators. They are not national statistical data, but allow for comparability and projection;

(b) The problems arising from rapid urbanization are manifested in the pressure on urban services, the rapid growth of slums, rural-urban migration and weak food security. The Urban Agenda stresses the importance of people-centered urban planning to avoid unforeseen repercussions and ensure the establishment of more inclusive, secure, sustainable and resilient cities, rather than limiting work to tackling the consequences of unbridled urban growth and its negative impact on societies, social cohesion and sustainability;

(c) The guide to measuring urban deprivation prepared by ESCWA, in collaboration with UN Habitat and the Arab Urban Development Institute, has been fully applied in Tripoli, Lebanon. Research is underway on necessary funding to implement it in Tunis and Nouakchott.

2. Age structural transitions and sustainable development
(Agenda item 5 (b))

26. Under this sub-item, the Committee considered document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/4(Part II) on age structural transitions and sustainable development. The presentation defined all age groups, namely children, young people, active working-age adults and older persons, and listed the development challenges they faced in the Arab region and beyond. Notable challenges included child labour, early marriage, dropping out of school, unemployment of young people and active working-age adults, youth participation in armed conflict and older persons suffering from chronic non-communicable diseases, in view of the absence of social protection programmes. The presentation reviewed the demographic profiles of ESCWA member States, and anticipated changes in age structures based on demographic trends and prospects, and their implications for development policymaking.

27. The presentation showed that over half of ESCWA member States had transitional age structures, with 45-60 per cent of the population comprising young people under 30, thus indicating upcoming demographic changes in most Arab countries but at different rates. The Arab region must adapt to the ageing phenomenon given the lack of resources and weak institutional structures and policies. The presentation set out recommendations to member States on measures to benefit from the demographic window, including taking note of changes in age structures in national strategies and development policies.

28. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Stressing the need to include data on disability rates, and indicating the availability of national statistical data in several countries comparable with data set out in the document to ensure their accuracy, especially concerning average life expectancy in Tunisia;

(b) Tackling differences in standards used to define children and older persons, such as the legal definition (civil and Sharia) and definitions in international conventions, taking into account the presence of two categories of older persons based on biological age and retirement age, and stressing the importance of Arab countries agreeing on a unified definition for each group;

(c) Noting that one of the main challenges concerning older persons is the pressure they place on financial balances in social security systems and the resulting need to increase health-care spending, in view of the low percentage of the population covered by insurance programmes and high unemployment;

(d) Ensuring that social insurance funds take into account demographic changes when preparing actuarial studies, especially on pensions and takaful systems, to avoid negatively impacting fund balances;

(e) Taking into account children's best interests when considering the challenges facing them, thus requiring their participation in deciding their future and protecting them from family and other forms of violence and from economic exploitation;

(f) Not overlooking new and highly important phenomena facing young people, such as addiction, deviancy and illegal migration, and the need to prepare social specialists for tackling such problems;

(g) Awarding top priority to women of reproductive age (15-45) given the fertility spike in the region, and including in the document an analysis of challenges facing other social groups, such as migrants, the forcibly displaced, refugees and nomads;

(h) Stressing the importance of investing in the demographic transition in Arab countries to reap the benefits of the demographic window;

(i) Allocating a larger space in the document to analysing rapid demographic changes in the region, especially changes within age groups, and examining the significant disparities between urban and rural population groups and the impact of migration on young people;

(j) Studying links between different groups, analysing the negative impact of each group's status on that of the others, and developing a comprehensive associative framework to solve the issues of different age groups.

3. Intergenerational justice: concept, dimensions and policy implications
(Agenda item 5 (c))

29. Under this sub-item, the Committee considered document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/4(Part III) on intergenerational justice: concept, dimensions and policy implications, which was prepared pursuant to a recommendation made at the twenty-eighth ESCWA session and to the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice. The presentation defined the concept of intergenerational justice as "the fair allocation of burdens and benefits across generations, where fairness entails that the pursuit of welfare by the present generation does not diminish the opportunities of succeeding generations for pursuing a good and decent life". Intergenerational justice requires balance between the needs of present and future generations based on the principles of social justice, namely enhancing rights, equity, equality and participation. The concept not only applies to natural resource sustainability but also to all issues affecting future generations, such as public debt and social protection. The study of intergenerational justice is of special importance in the Arab region in view of the focus on economic growth and natural resource exploitation, rapid population growth, recurrent financial crises, weak environmental governance, and a lack of political stability. The presentation covered the ethical motives of social intergenerational justice, and its related dimensions and standards relevant to the Arab region. It set out the economic, social, environmental and financial dimensions and the adopted indicators to measure each dimension, proposals to include intergenerational justice issues in formulating policies and development programmes, and examples of practical interventions to protect the rights of future Arab generations.

30. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) The importance of intergenerational justice to achieving sustainable development;

(b) The need to adopt indicators on social exclusion and gender discrimination, given their impact on achieving social justice;

(c) The importance of incorporating in policymaking the political dimension impacting governance and participation.

C. PROPOSED PROGRAMME OF WORK FOR THE BIENNIUM 2018-2019
IN THE FIELD OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
(Agenda item 6)

31. The representative of the secretariat presented document E/ESCWA/SDD/2017/IG.1/5 on the proposed programme of work for the biennium 2018-2019 in the field of social development. The document covered the proposed ESCWA activities and outcomes for the biennium 2018-2019. The programme of work was prepared in line with subprogramme 2 on social development of the revised strategic framework for the biennium 2018-2019, which was adopted by ESCWA at its twenty-ninth session (Doha, 13-15 December 2016).

32. The speaker explained the objective of subprogramme 2 on social development, the proposed strategy for implementing the work programme, and the three expected accomplishments regarding social policies on rights, international migration and social justice, noting that the fourth expected accomplishment on achieving the 2030 Agenda would not be included in the programme of work until further notice. He considered the external factors expected to impact the implementation of the programme of work, such as data and resource availability, political stability, and national commitment to achieving social justice. While the regular budget funded issues of social inclusion, social protection, persons with disabilities, young people, sustainable development, population, international migration, social justice and the New Urban Agenda, technical cooperation activities focused on providing advisory services and organizing training workshops upon countries' request. The United Nations Development Account was involved in implementing several projects on urban and population policies, enhancing social justice, and adopting a participatory approach in SDG implementation.

33. The ensuing discussion focused on the following:

(a) Incorporating in the ESCWA programme of work a project by the Development Account on humanitarian policies, aimed at linking between humanitarian work, peace and development;

(b) Including in the programme of work clear outcomes of population policies, periodic reviews on the implementation of recommendations of the International Conference on Population and Development, and activities on 'resilient cities' (a key topic in several international conferences planned for 2018).
